

Let's go fly a kite ...

but it's not worth your life

Whether young or old, kiting holds that unmistakable mystique. They're flown in any shape and size and come in a myriad of colors. It's exciting to see your child's face when the kite is finally launched. But what happens if the beautiful kite becomes entangled in a power line? Contact your local Touchstone Energy cooperative to let them know. Do yourself and your family a favor, and don't go after it yourself. While you may think that kite is one-of-a-kind, remember that your life is too, and it's worth more than any kite could ever be.

Kites should be flown only during good weather conditions in large open areas and kept far away from overhead power lines.

For more information, contact your local Touchstone Energy cooperative.

