ROADTRIP

From Hampshires, to Oxfords, and now Border Leicesters!

Just outside of Palmer sits the PW Sheep Farm, which is the only Border Leicester sheep farm in central Illinois. Jack and Vida Price, their daughter and son-in-law Brandy and Dave Wamsley, along with their two kids, Ben and Abby, are the avid owners of the farm.

When asked how they got into the sheep business, Jack laughed, pointed at his daughter, and said, "She convinced us." As a little girl, Brandy watched her older brother show cattle in 4-H. However, being more petite, she wanted to show an animal that was a little bit smaller. "I thought sheep were cute and fluffy!" she laughed. The family started showing Southdowns and then went on to show Hampshires for three years. "When Brandy was 11 years old, a family friend's son, who showed Oxfords, was heading to college. So, Brandy struck a deal with him and bought the whole flock of sheep on credit, which she paid off in a years' time," Jack said. Fourteen years ago, they sold off the Oxfords and bought into a flock of Border Leicesters. "Oxfords are large sheep and are very strong and pushy. Borders are more like woolly puppy dogs," Brandy shared. The Price-Wamsley family is working on bringing popularity to the Border Leicester breed. "About six to eight years ago, we started a Border Leicester show at the Illinois State Fair. In 2023, we had 30 sheep that were shown!" she said.

Seven years ago, for Mother's Day, Jack bought Vida a small shed that they transformed into The Wool House, where they sell yarn, roving, and other products. Once a sheep is sheared, the fleece is taken to a skirting table where the vegetable matter is picked off. To turn the fleece into roving or yarn, it must be washed, so it is put into a tub filled with hot water and soap. Usually, the fleece sits for half an hour, the water gets dumped, and the process gets repeated until it is clean. After the washing process is finished, it can be spun into yarn or made into other items such as dryer balls. The Price-Wamsley family has started attending local farmers markets, so keep an eye out!

Both Ben and Abby have followed in their mom's footsteps and are very involved in their 4-H club, Lad and Lassies in Morrisonville. Ben is beginning his senior year at Taylorville High School and is looking to pursue a career in sports communication. Abby is starting her freshman year at Taylorville High School and is interested in studying veterinary science in college

Cooperatives & Jobs

Cooperative businesses are run by those who live and work in the community, keeping jobs at home. In October, co-ops all across the United States are celebrating the benefits and values that cooperatives bring to their members and communities.

While co-ops operate in many industries and sectors of the economy, seven cooperative principles set us apart from other businesses: voluntary and open membership; democratic member control; member's economic participation; autonomy and independence; education, training, and information; cooperation among cooperatives; and concern for community.

We are in it for the long haul, strengthening communities through jobs, service, and community involvement.

with a focus on large animals. They both show sheep and wool in 4-H. "Through 4-H, I've grown in leadership, independence, and public speaking," Abby shared. "I've also learned a lot about medicine and the importance of caring for sheep. Whether it's a sheep that has a cut, needs deworming medicine, or is birthing a lamb, it's all a part of the process and the life cycle," she said.

Through the years, Brandy has gained knowledge and is now able to pass it down to her kids. "I've been able to teach Ben and Abby about life and the responsibilities that come with taking care of animals. We are a Chrisitan family, so we believe that we are stewards, and it is our job to take care of the animals to the best of our ability," she shared.
